...announcement, who is credited to his deluging is quickened to suspect the malice of another. An honest man gives the voter man the credit of sincere motives until the reverse is proved.

They call in the police in Tripple while the brethren in a certain church settle a new about discharging a pastor. Gentle religious money certain things are done by their name.

One can say that Attorney General Knox is not acting after the railway commission in the proper spirit. His pronouncement of the government's case before the p. case will add a chapter to the history of the trust question.

Public leadership requires not only the strictest honesty and the most disinterestedness, but it requires a measure of ability that is capable of dealing with the question that arises. The leaders must be men, who will give to the current study of the problems that confront them, the opinions sound to be based upon facts.

Up in Missouri, they sometimes find evidence of overzeal of cops when they criticize their agents through the medium of justice. Probably however, will there be no danger for an outsider in expressing distrust in a crowd that trusts leaders loose as fast as a feather and honest promoter one can expect. It may be that the censorious, interpret the law correctly, but the impetuousness of a man cannot interpret the conviction that "there's something rotten" in the state of Missouri. If Mr. Pugh's convictions of the leaders are not legal, it is in time for Missouri to have laws on its face that men who wish to do his duty in the protection of the interests and honor of his state will not have his hands tied.

A discharged rabble without leaders and without a without discipline cannot attract for a moment before forces that are organized and organized. It is no less true with respect to a town. The business interests of a town must move with stability upon a foundation that affects the town as a whole. Leaders there must be, but they will accomplish little without the assistance and cooperation of every man in the ranks. Hence, the wisdom of a commercial club, in which every citizen participates. The commercial club represents the organized efforts of a town to protect its interests. It is indispensable that it be an organization, granting the interests of the town at all times. If it would accomplish its mission.

WRIGHT TALKS ON LABOR

The Commissioner Profiles Labor Sharing System.

Philadelphia, Dec. 15.—"The wage system will pass away. In its stead, I believe, there will come a system which will be composed of profit sharing and the co-operation ideas. The great labor question means the struggle of humanity for a higher standard of life. The employer must consider the employee as well as the stockholder, as an investor."

These words were contained in an address upon "The Wage Question" given by Col. W. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, before the Society of Blind Culture of Chicago.

Of scarcely less interest than his prediction of a new labor system was Colonel Wright's approval of a plan to insure labor against temporary meetings from accident, illness or advancing age. The German law was quoted, under which the employer pays one-fourth the cost of a sick and death benefit policy, the employee one-fourth and the government one-half. "England," said Colonel Wright, "has taken up this question, and we of the United States are steadily approaching it."

Continuing, Colonel Wright said:

"Capital charges to the consumer the depreciation of property and machinery. Why should not the depreciation of labor's machinery—his brain, his hands, his health, be included in the final cost?"

"We see in every progressive community a tendency to make the workman's life no longer for a wage sufficient to enable him to keep body and soul together.

"Labor has been taught to feel that it is a social as well as an economic power in the community, and the advancing process has gone so far that the demand of labor for a reasonable margin beyond that fixed by the iron law of wages."

"The wage system will pass away. It has had been shown, conclusively in many of its applications. It depends too largely for its operation upon the generosity and great misanthropy of employers, that there are many such men who would seek to influence the votes or actions of their employees, and that the incapacity of making their workmen a happy life. This does not mean, however, that we make use of these opportunities to force conditions of the system and argue for a greater measure of independence for those who live."

"The system that will take the place of that under which money wages are paid, probably will be composed of the profit-sharing and co-operative plans. The working people will then acquire the interest of investors, the more capable will rise to their opportunities and the less worthy will find their way out."

SPECIAL CHARGES
